

Broadband ownership should be limited.

Unless a person living in the United States is willing to dig deeper for their news, they are receiving information that has a very narrow focus. The period leading up to the US invasion of Iraq made it clear that our media in the U.S. is inferior to that of the BBC, for example. So many organizations owned by so few people doesn't make for better media. It makes for a dumber, more homogenized media. It doesn't have to be that way. Remember a time before Clear Channel? It wasn't so long ago. Regulate, please.
